

Sag Harbor House

“Unprepossessing” is an apt way to describe the 1920s colonial revival house that Ted Porter found in 1999 in Sag Harbor, Long Island, and finished renovating for himself and his partner, Steve Godeke, last year. The New York-based architect with his own practice wanted a weekend home in this picturesque former whaling village, and the location, within walking distance of Main Street, was ideal.